Army dominance of Warrior Trials continues at field events

West Point, New York — Army athletes overwhelmed their Air Force and Marine rivals in the field competition at the 2014 Army Warrior Trials, capturing eight of the 12 gold medals awarded in a variety of discus and shot put events. The overall field medal count stands at 21 Army, 13 Air Force and two for the Marines.

More than 100 wounded, ill and injured service members and Veterans from across the United States are at West Point competing in the Army Warrior Trials, June 15-20. The event is hosted by Warrior Transition Command and includes athletes from the Army, Marines and Air Force facing off in archery, basketball, cycling, track and field, swimming, shooting, sitting volleyball and wheelchair basketball. Participants in the trials include athletes with spinal cord injuries, traumatic brain injuries, visual impairment, serious illnesses and amputations.

Army Pfc. Kevin Szortyka Jr., Warrior Transition Unit, Fort Stewart, Ga., approached the shot put throw ring for this competition, having only completed a few weeks of practice.

“Shot put is all in the mind. You have to maintain a level of confidence,” he said. “None of these guys know anything you don’t. We are all here for a reason.”

After three rounds, Szortyka placed third in the shot put open category for athletes without permanent medical disabilities.

The athletes took a brief rest before moving to the discus competition. “Shot put is more about power, and discus is more about finesse, which is not my thing,” Szortyka said. “This is the first time I’ve thrown discus…although that isn’t much more than the two times I have practiced shot put.”

Szortyka is based at the Fort Stewart Warrior Transition Unit (WTU) in Georgia, where his job site assignment is with the occupational therapists. “All I do is adaptive sports,” he explained.

Szoryka’s favorite adaptive sport to play is wheelchair basketball. He is transitioning out of the Army in the next month and will be moving back home to Tallahassee, Florida, so he found a wheelchair basketball league nearby to join. “When I get home, it’s a great opportunity to keep playing,” Szoryka said.

As with many of the athletes here, this is Szoryka’s first time competing for a chance to go to the Warrior Games. “The coaches here are great. I had no idea they’d be so knowledgeable and professional,” he said. “They really took the opportunity to make personal relationships with us.”

Many of the field medalists will represent their respective services at the 2014 Warrior Games slated for Sep. 28-Oct. 4, Colorado Springs, Colorado.
